Daub Campaign Sparks Anger in Gays

1978 started out as a ho-hum, non-presidential election year. That changed suddenly when, three weeks ago, a television campaign ad began airing during prime time which stated, "John Cavanaugh voted 'yes' to spend federal funds in cases arising out of disputes over the issues of homosexuality or gay rights. We don't think he has our priorities straight." The ad was sponsored by the Hal Daub for Congress committee.

Angered by the exploitation of homophobia for purposes of political gain, the Board of Directors of Gay Awareness Iowa Nebraska mailed flyers to members residing in the second congressional district, urging people to call or write Daub's headquarters to complain about this campaign tactic. Although several hundred calls and letters were received, the ad continued. Callers were given various conflicting reports and comments, including "Are you that nut that called yesterday?"

Daub, Gays Discuss Objections to TV Ad

Hal Daub met with homosexuals Monday to discuss objections to a television advertisement in which they criticized the ad.

However, the Republican candidate in the Congressional District now declined Tuesday to discuss details of the meeting or a report that he insisted the news media not be invited since that no tape recorder be present.

Instead, he issued a short statement saying he has agreed to meet "with constituents fact to face to hear their views."

According to the Rev. Robert C. Diers, a board member of Gay Awareness Iowa Nebraska (GAIN), Daub said he didn't want to be interviewed.

Called Distortion

Diers said the gays and "real straight" objected to a portion of a television commercial in which Daub points out that his opponent, incumbent John Cavanaugh, had voted for legislation that provides federal funds to fight against the fight for gay rights.

Said Diers, "It is a distortion of the record. I am not a supporter of the measure."

He said Daub, 50, is a district attorney in Omaha.

Dr. W. Meredith Bacon recently underwent facial surgery to fix fractures and is recovering for her new forehead fixings.

Looking in the shade of the trees being the type face, Professor W.

Meredith Bacon drops her head in contemplation, perhaps thinking about the administration meeting she just came from, or maybe thinking about meeting denounced to girls. She made good use of a colleague outside of Uppley Administration Building. She had a little bit to her head to be sick, attempting to keep her shoulder-length grey hair from her eyes. The day almost of these Nebraska summer days have been, is full of the heat that sticks, and she has dressed for the weather in light tan pants, a comfortable shirt and a long-sleeved blouse.

Today she is being in touch.

Last semester she was Wally M. Bacon, president of the Faculty Senate, professor of political science, strong member of the church and his congregation, and husband to Lynn Bacon, who is a teacher of Spanish and French at Creighton Prep High School.

Now she is legally and officially W. Meredith Bacon, professor of political science, strong member of the church and his congregation, and spouse to Lynn Bacon, who is a teacher of Spanish and French at Creighton Prep High School.

The name was legally changed on June 28.

"It's a successful," Dr. Bacon said simply in a tone much softer than the booming voice of her semester's Wally Bacon. "It's a relatively late decision to make, but I think it will make the decision that I transition into living as the person I always thought myself to have been."

That person began to surface at the age of four, when Wally first began to let something out, moving. As he grew he knew he was different. He preferred soccer sports, he was usually and often a bit more.

"I didn't have a name for it."

With a hopeful outlook and a roster full of returning players, Dennis Hansen, the new UNO men's basketball coach, is looking to guide the Mavericks to a successful season.

Dennis Hansen

Hansen, a 37-year-old married father of two, believes that the transition will be a smooth one, as much of the coaching staff remains unchanged, along with assistant coaches, Mike Binkiewicz and Kevin Conard. Conard has also moved up the chain, taking the position as assistant head coach. Binkiewicz, who had been a part-time assistant, has been named a full-time assistant coach.

"So far, much of the staff has stayed intact. This should make the transition smooth," he said.

Hansen said that he plans to focus on that consistency to forward with a successful basketball program that has topped the North Central Conference two years in a row.

"Things should stay at the status quo. We're going to prepare the guys to play some tough, but, have a bit fun and the words will follow," he said.

Hansen believes that the new job and

Bars

Description
Photograph of a brick from Omaha's the Diamond Bar, which was known as the "Oldest Gay Bar in Nebraska." This brick is from the bar's first building and is mainly painted gold with a bit of pink, blue, and green. "The Diamond Bar" is written in sequins and the brick is covered with little gold stars. Above the words is a small, broach-like likeness of the Little Blue Boy.

The brick was given to Pat Phalen, Emperor VI, at Coronation VII, his stepping down ceremony. The text of prepared remarks follow:
"Diamond Bar / Good evening Emperor Pat, Empress Veronica, and Athena JoJo - the Imperial Court of Neb. as well as all Courts of all nations.
Greetings from The Diamond Bar and welcome to Omaha. Tonight we send as our personal representative Miss April Ann Rose, as well as members of our "family of customers." Not only as a gay bar, but as a community pillar of strength in which all others may familiar with word processing programs, which are made by many companies and allow the computer to operate as a typewriter. We can type data that appear on the screen, revise the data in numerous ways, print the data using our printer, and/or save the data for later retrieval. Agencies use word processing software to enter data in client files, keep worker records of client contact, send letters, and file.

316 General Practice with Organizations and Communities

Software may be designed for a single purpose, such as word processing or file "integration," allowing several functions to be accessed within a single program. An integrated system might allow you to type a letter to a client, look in a database to find the client's home address and your last contact with the client, and then use a calendar program to schedule an appointment on your first open date next month. If you were using separate programs, you would have had to exit one program or program before going into another.

Database software allows us to maintain extensive records and retrieve that data quickly. We might like to know which of our clients we have not seen in the month.

members, and any other data. At the same time, databases are useful for purposes other than maintaining client records. We could, for example, use a database to keep membership records for a community association or organization, to maintain a record of contributions to a political campaign, or to save a list of district workers and their agencies, phone numbers, and other information. You can also have the database reorganize information into reports. You might want a report on all members of your organization who have not paid their dues. As you can see, a database can be a useful piece of software, whether you are working with microcomputers or minis computers.

Spreadsheets are software packages that allow us to calculate and maintain various kinds of financial or statistical information. Spreadsheets are essentially electronic accounting ledgers into which we type financial information we would write into an accountant's ledger. All software spreadsheets allow us to keep track of what we spend on various projects, and changes in a figure can be automatically reflected in other figures. Figure 14.2 displays a typical spreadsheet.

could have many more columns. The financial information you collect allows you to build forms and calculate totals. This way, as the year makes progress, the total figures along with it. Then, the spreadsheet would keep changing local into the spreadsheet. You a 5 percent increase in your
